Gadget/Sports Enthusiast

Robert has always loved playing sports. He has been a member of a recreational softball league every summer and when turned 20, he started playing hockey as a goalie. He prides himself on fully researching before buying high quality sporting equipment.

His propensity for researching products to ensure that he gets the absolute most bang for his buck is evident when he purchases gadgets, which he does far more often than his wife of 12 years is happy with. He finds that searching for and comparing information about products is almost as fun as using them.

Of course I need to buy a $3000 video camera to film my son's soccer game...

Robert always as some advice or opinion about anything you talk about, but he is always careful to consider your side of the story and you will never see him angry. Even though he has so much to say, he only participates in online forums when he is looking for specific information about a product that he is interested in buying.

Robert is good at his job and is usually considered whenever a promotion is in order, however, he rarely talks shop with friends, unless it's a funny story about a client that would remain nameless.
